Delegated Political-Military Leadership from Rome to America Today

This book is a study of proconsulship, a form of delegated political-military leadership historically associated with the governance of large empires. Opening with a conceptual and historical analysis of proconsulship as an aspect of imperial or quasi-imperial rule generally, it surveys its origins and development in the late Roman Republic and its manifestations in the British Empire. The main focus is proconsulship in American history. Beginning with the occupation of Cuba and the Philippines after the Spanish-American War, it discusses the role of General Douglas MacArthur in East Asia during and after World War II, the occupation of Germany (focusing on General Lucius Clay), and proconsular leadership during the Vietnam War and the occupation of Iraq and Afghanistan at the turn of the twenty-first century. An additional chapter provides an overview and assessment of the evolution of American political-military command and control and decision-making after the end of the Cold War.

Carnes Lord is Professor of Military and Naval Strategy in the Center for Naval Warfare Studies, United States Naval War College. As a political scientist, his interests lie in international and strategic studies, national security organization and management, and political philosophy. Lord holds PhD degrees from Cornell University and Yale University and has taught political science at Yale University, the University of Virginia, and the Fletcher School of Law and Diplomacy. He has held several senior positions in the United States government, including director of international communications and information policy on the National Security Council staff (1981–1984), assistant to the vice president for national security affairs (1989–1991), and Distinguished Fellow at the National Defense University (1991–1993). Lord is the author of, among other works, The Presidency and the Management of National Security (1988), The Modern Prince: What Leaders Need to Know Now (2003), and Losing Hearts and Minds? Strategic Influence and Public Diplomacy in the Age of Terror (2006).

Acknowledgments

A number of obligations have been incurred in the course of writing this book. I have benefited from the advice and criticism of several colleagues at the Naval War College, notably Donald Chisholm, Bradford Lee, Michael Pavkovic, and Robert Rubel. I am also grateful to Robert Rubel for some stimulating discussions of potential reform of the Unified Command Plan from a naval perspective, which importantly influenced my thinking in the final chapter, as well as for reviewing the chapter on Wesley Clark. Particular thanks also to Arthur Eckstein of the University of Maryland for his careful reading of the chapter on ancient Rome. Alice Juda of the Naval War College Library provided cheerful and patient research assistance. I have benefited from generous financial support provided by the Smith Richardson Foundation; special thanks are owed to Nadia Schadlow for her support of my efforts, in this and other writing projects. I am also much indebted to my literary agent, Donald Gastwirth, for interesting Cambridge University Press in the manuscript, as well as for his constant encouragement and friendship; thanks are owed, too, to Lewis Bateman, my editor at Cambridge, as well as his assistant, Anne Lovering Rounds. Nancy Greenwood was a careful reader of the manuscript. Finally, I thank my wife, Meredith Lord, for holding the ring on the home front, and Rebecca, Blair, and Sarah, for their sweetness and laughter. This book is dedicated to my daughters.
