Quine and Davidson on Language, Thought and Reality

Quine and Davidson are among the leading thinkers of the twentieth century. Their influence on contemporary philosophy is second to none, and their impact is also strongly felt in disciplines such as linguistics and psychology. This is the first book devoted to both of them, but also the first to question some of their basic assumptions. Hans-Johann Glock critically scrutinizes their ideas on ontology, analyticity, apriority and necessity, truth, meaning and interpretation, thought and language, and shows that their attempts to accommodate meaning and thought within a naturalistic framework, either by impugning intensional notions as unclear and non-factual or by extracting them from physical facts, are ultimately unsuccessful. His discussion includes interesting comparisons of Quine and Davidson with other philosophers, particularly Wittgenstein. Glock also offers detailed accounts of central issues in contemporary analytic philosophy, such as whether philosophy is continuous with science, whether truth is a feature of sentences or propositions, whether meaning and reference are indeterminate, whether language requires conventions, and whether animals are capable of having beliefs and desires.

HANS-JOHANN GLOCK is Reader in Philosophy at the University of Reading. He is the author of A Wittgenstein Dictionary (1996), which has been translated into German, French, Portuguese and Polish. He is editor of The Rise of Analytic Philosophy (1997), Wittgenstein: a Critical Reader (2001), and Strawson and Kant (2003), and co-editor (with Robert L. Arrington) of Wittgenstein's Philosophical Investigations (1991), and Wittgenstein and Quine (1996).

It is the profession of philosophers to question platitudes that others accept without thinking twice. A dangerous profession, since philosophers are more easily discredited than platitudes, but a useful one. For when a good philosopher challenges a platitude, it usually turns out that the platitude was essentially right; but the philosopher has noticed trouble that one who did not think twice could not have met. In the end, the challenge is answered and the platitude survives, more often than not. But the philosopher has done the adherents of the platitude a service: he has made them think twice.

In writing this book, I have incurred many debts. I am grateful for permission to use material from the following articles of mine: ‘Necessity and Normativity’, in H. Sluga and D. Stern (eds.), The Cambridge Companion to Wittgenstein (Cambridge University Press), 198–225; ‘On Safari with Wittgenstein, Quine and Davidson’, in R. L. Arrington and H. J. Glock (eds.), Wittgenstein and Quine (London: Routledge, 1996), 144–72; ‘Truth without People?’, Philosophy 72 (1997), 85–104; ‘Animals, Thoughts and Concepts’, Synthese 123 (2000), 35–64; ‘Does Ontology Exist?’, Philosophy 77 (2002), 235–60.

As always, I owe thanks to my colleagues and graduate students at Reading for their forbearance and support. I am especially indebted to Javier Kalhat for his assistance at the final stages. Hilary Gaskin of CUP has been very patient and efficient throughout. Two anonymous readers for the Press improved the book through their fair and constructive reports. Over the years, I have learnt more than I can say from the meetings of the St John’s College discussion group at Oxford. Maria Alvarez, Bob Arrington, Jonathan Dancy, Kathrin Glüer, Anthony Kenny, John Preston, Bede Rundle, Stuart Shanker, Ralph Stoecker and Peter Strawson have greatly improved my philosophical understanding through conversations and comments on material contained in this book. Peter Strawson’s philosophy of language has also been a general source of inspiration to me.

I am grateful to the participants of a graduate seminar on Davidson at Queen’s University (Ontario) in 1997, that I conducted jointly with David Bakhurst. David was an exemplary host, and has been an esteemed philosophical companion ever since my first baffling encounters with the writings of Quine and Davidson at Oxford in 1983. He also commented on parts of the final draft.

xii Acknowledgements

The bulk of this book was written at the University of Bielefeld between 1998 and 2000. I am very grateful to the Alexander von Humboldt Foundation for awarding me a research fellowship. I am also indebted to my host Eike von Savigny, for his immensely generous support over the years, and for constantly keeping me on my toes philosophically speaking. Ansgar Beckermann honoured and helped me by devoting a Ph.D. seminar to my drafts, as well as through his astute and informative comments. Christian Nimtz is not just a flesh-and-blood encyclopaedia of analytic philosophy. He was also brave enough to confront my obtuseness in dealing with computers and my obstinacy in resisting the allure of naturalism. My discussions of formal semantics have benefited greatly from his suggestions.

Back at Reading, I was privileged to run a seminar on truth together with Wolfgang Künne. I have profited immeasurably from his writings, from our conversations, and from his exacting scrutiny of several chapters, which saved me from many a blunder. For many years now, my friend John Hyman has tried his best to bring out the best in me, not least by reading most of the chapters, sometimes in several versions. I wish I could have done justice to his probing questions, his acute criticisms and his ingenious proposals. As things stand, I can only thank him. I would not even know how to thank Peter Hacker. He set me on the thorny but rewarding path of analytic philosophy. His intellectual and moral support have been unstinting, and his comments on virtually the whole of the book have been invaluable.

My greatest debt, finally, is to Gabi, Sonja and Helen. They had to put up with yet another ordeal, not to mention many journeys, and still managed to comfort and inspire me through their love, kindness and good humour.
