

Contents

Acknowledgments	page vii
1. Introduction: The American Press and International Relations	I
A Constructivist Perspective on IR, Communication, and Journalism	3
Constructing International Affairs	3
Constructing Communication	9
Constructing Foreign Correspondence	19
Studying the Construction of the World through Foreign Correspondence	25
Conclusions	31
2. A New Country, A New Profession: America and Its Foreign Correspondents Get Ready to Take on the World	34
Journalism's Professionalization: Nineteenth-Century Writers and Readers	35
Getting Entangled: U.S. Foreign Relations in the Nineteenth Century	40
America Covers the World: Nineteenth-Century Media Discourses	43
Conclusions	64
3. America Takes Global Center Stage: The Ascent of a Political and Communication Power	67
The Power of the Press: Taking on the World, in the Public's Interest	68
Taking the Lead: American Policy Goes Global	74
America Covers the World: Media Discourses in the World Wars Era	77
Conclusions	106
	v

vi	Contents
4.	The Media Are American in the American Century: The Apex of American Political and Communication Power 109 The Bulldog: U.S. Journalism Tackles the Cold War 110 From a Bipolar to a Unipolar World: Winning the Cold War 117 America Covers the World: Media Discourses in the Cold War 121 Conclusions 153
5.	A Web of Disentanglements: American Policy and Media Struggle to Engage the Post–Cold War World 157 Clicks for All: U.S. Journalism Stumbles into the Twenty-First Century 159 Redefining Power: Global Leadership in the Twenty-First Century? 165 America Covers the World: Post–Cold War Media Discourses 170 Conclusions 201
6.	The Importance of Being There and Making People Care: The Troubled Present and Possible Futures of U.S. Foreign Correspondence 204 Can the Market Save the Marketplace of Ideas? Possible Futures of Journalism 206 Staying Power: Possible Futures of Foreign Correspondence 215 It's What We're Here For: U.S. News Leaders Protect Foreign Reporting 221 "Pretty Bloody Crucial": International Correspondence Strategies Abroad 227 Conclusions 232
7.	Conclusion: Reaffirming Journalism's Role in World Affairs 235 The Discursive Role of Media in International Relations 238 Evolving Media Discourses of the World 243 Evolving Foreign Policy Paradigms 248 Foreign Correspondence and World Affairs 251 Conclusion: The Irreplaceable Mediator in Danger 255
	Bibliography 259
	Index 279