ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

This book is a revised and expanded version of my doctoral dissertation, "British Public Opinion and Greece, 1944-49", submitted to Hull University, UK, in 1992. I would like to express my sincere gratitude to my advisors, the late Emeritus Professor John Saville and Professor David Howell, without whose continuous inspiration and dedicated guidance I could not have completed this project. Since first submitting this dissertation, I have devoted several additional years of research in Britain to complete this present volume.

I am grateful as well to numerous other persons who shared their knowledge in British politics and the Greek civil war. Among them, I would particularly like to acknowledge Diana Pym, for allowing me to view papers of the period which were in her possession, and for her hospitality; Marion Sarafis, who shared memories and insights into the LDG's activities with me (they both died in the late 1990s); Michael Foot, one of the most fierce critics of "Bevinism"; Steve Runciman, who visited the exile island of Makronisos in the late 1940s; and Daily Worker's journalist, Malcolm MacEwen, who, in the early 1990s turned from "Red" to "Green". I am also indebted to the staff of many libraries, including the Public Record Office at Kew, the University of Hull's Brynmor Jones Library, the King's College Library in London, the Bodleian Library in Oxford and the National Museum of Labour History in Manchester.

Chapters of this book have been read and commented by John Iatrides, an expert in the Greek events of the 1940s, and David Howell, who specializes in the British labour movement. Their comments have greatly improved this work, and any errors that remain are entirely my own. I am also grateful to Heinz Richter at the University of Mannheim, for all the careful work that is required to turn a manuscript into a book.

Finally, I would like to express my deepest appreciation to my wife, Dora, and my children, Efi and Constantine, for a lifetime of love, joy, and inspiration. The book is dedicated to my mother who died suddenly in 2010 and to my supervisor John Saville (1916-2009), from whom I have learned more than words can acknowledge. I am really glad that I was one of the contributors to the volume published recently for him.¹

1 David Howell, Dianne Kirby and Kevin Morgan (eds.), John Saville: Commitment and History. Themes from the Life and Work of a Socialist Historian (London: Lawrence & Wishart, 2011). John Saville was one of the leading socialist academics of his generation, and one of the most influential figures in British labour history. He was born John Stamatopoulos. His father was a Greek engineer who died during World War I. He lectured at Hull University for nearly 40 years and was a member of the British Communist Party and the Communist Party's Historians' Group until 1956. In partnership with E. P. Thompson, he then launched an opposition journal, the New Reasoner (soon to become the New Left Review). From 1964, most of his political writing was to be published in the Socialist Register, an annual volume to co-edited for some decades with Ralph Miliband. His major works are the Dictionary of Labour Biography, of which he was able to complete the first ten volumes (1972-2000), and the three volumes of Essays in Labour History (1961, 1971, 1977) co-edited with Asa Briggs.
