

Gabriele Balbi
with Simone Fari, Giuseppe Richeri and Spartaco Calvo

NETWORK NEUTRALITY

Switzerland's role in the genesis of the Telegraph Union, 1855-1875

Peter Lang

Contents

Acknowledgements	9
Introduction	11
Chapter 1 — Switzerland takes on telecommunications.
The politics, economics, technology and society of the period	19
Introduction	19
1.1 The beginnings of telecommunications in Switzerland	20
1.2 Federalism and democracy	25
1.3 Neutrality and defence	30
1.4 Geography and international relations	34
1.5 Liberalism and telecommunications	36
1.6 Foreign trade	42
1.7 Radicalism and telecommunications	44
1.8 Know-how and technical elite	45
1.9 National and international interests	50
Chapter 2 — “Bringing together the two large electric currents dividing Europe” (1849–1865)	53
Introduction	53
2.1 Bilateral conventions	54
2.2 The Austro-German Union	57
2.3 The Western European Union	60
2.4 En route to convergence	61
2.5 Paris 1855: the birth of WETU	64
2.6 Turin 1857: the invite to Austria	68
2.7 Stuttgart 1857 and Brussels 1858	71
2.8 Bern 1858: an attempt to clone Stuttgart	72

2.9	Friedrichshafen 1858: Switzerland holding the balance	75
2.10	Bregenz 1863: a European Union in view	80
2.11	Switzerland's solutions	82
2.12	Diplomacy and imbroglio in the 1850s and 1860s	84
Chapter 3 — The birth of the Telegraph Union:
	the 1865 Paris Conference	87
	Introduction	87
3.1	Austria's presence	88
3.2	The Federal Council calls the tune	97
3.3	Louis Curchod emerging	99
3.4	Switzerland scores	109
3.5	Switzerland beefs up	113
Chapter 4 — The 1868 Vienna Conference
	Introduction	115
4.1	A special agent for international telegraphy	116
4.2	Challet-Venel decodes Curchod	121
4.3	The anti-dumping regulation	123
4.4	The debate over the Bureau	128
4.5	Swiss reactions	139
4.6	Organization and ambiguity	143
Chapter 5 — Towards Rome Conference: Moves and
	Counter-moves (1868–1872)	147
	Introduction	147
5.1	Replacing Curchod	150
5.2	The Bureau as a peacemaker	155
5.3	Briefing the Swiss delegate(s) for Rome	157
5.4	The German move to snaffle the Bureau	158
5.5	The Germans at work	167
5.6	The Bureau left in Swiss hands	168
5.7	Swiss reactions	174

Chapter 6 — The Bureaucratisation of the Telegraph Union:
St Petersburg (1875)	177
Introduction	177
6.1 Continuity and change	180
6.2 Curchod mentoring the Russian delegate	183
6.3 The Bureau-cratic system	190
6.4 The separation of the ways	197
6.5 The Bureau as a Swiss body	206
Conclusion	209
References	215