

Contents

Acknowledgments	page ix
Introduction: From Fiction Into Metaphysics	xi
Part One The Artifactual Theory of Fiction	1
Foreword	3
1 If we postulated fictional objects, what would they be?	5
What fictional characters seem to be	5
Meinongian theories of fiction	14
Possibilist theories of fiction	17
Fictional characters as objects of reference	18
Fictional characters as imaginary objects	21
2 The nature and varieties of existential dependence	24
Dependence	29
Constant dependence	30
Historical dependence	31
Relations among types of dependence	33
3 Fictional characters as abstract artifacts	35
Dependencies of fictional characters	35
Fictional characters in a modal metaphysics	38
Fictions and other dependent abstracta	40
4 Reference to fictional characters	43
Kripke and fictional names	44
Baptism of fictional objects	46
Maintaining a chain of reference	49
Results for fiction and beyond	52
5 Identity conditions for fictional characters	55

Cambridge University Press
 978-0-521-06521-4 - Fiction and Metaphysics
 Amie L. Thomasson
 Table of Contents
More information

Troubles with Meinongian identity conditions	56
Identity conditions within a literary work	63
Identity conditions across literary works	67
Part Two Ontological decisions	71
Foreword	73
6 Fiction and experience	76
Pure content theories and fiction	77
Pure contextualist theories and fiction	84
Combined content/context approach	86
The intentional object theory of intentionality	88
7 Fiction and language	93
Paraphrase and pretense	94
Meinongian theories	100
The artifactual theory	105
Objections and assessment	111
8 Ontology and categorization	115
Piecemeal ontology versus categorial ontology	115
Traditional categories and sources of skepticism	117
System of existential categories	120
Familiar categories	124
Unfamiliar categories	127
A tool for ontology	134
9 Perils of false parsimony	137
Genuine parsimony versus false parsimony	138
Is doing without fictional objects really more parsimonious?	139
10 Ontology for a varied world	146
Lessons from the case of fiction	147
A modest proposal	150
Notes	154
Bibliography	166
Index	171